25X1A 1. Gen. Smith informed Gen. Cabell that Senator Smith, of Maine, needed certain maps for a lecture tour that she was making in Maine. Accordingly, [redacted] OCI Presentation people took some maps up to Mr. Lewis, Senator Smith's assistant, which were happily and enthusiastically received. I suggested that Mr. Lewis try fitting them into the car to make certain that they were the proper size, but he assured us that they were. Late in the afternoon Mr. Lewis informed me that the maps did not fit and that they would have to go without them. I told him that if there was any way in which we could develop or find a smaller set for him (which would still be viewable by an audience of 2,000) we would forward them.

2. I informed Mr. Ladd, of the Vice President's office, as to our relations with Mr. [redacted] and why we found it impossible to employ Mr. [redacted]. He was pleased to have the detailed information and the indications that Mr. [redacted] was bothering everybody on this matter.

3. Mr. Brobeck, of the staff of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, called to state that the Committee had left England a day early, had by-passed Spain and flown to Lisbon.
